More Changes For Levy Court

George "Jody" Sweeney

When the Levy Court meets, most legislation is submitted in the form of a motion. Each motion is then voted on by the Commissioners in attendance. The Commissioner can vote in favor, in opposition, or abstain. If they vote in favor, they must list reasons why they agree with the motion. If they vote in opposition or abstain, no reason is necessary.

The United States Supreme Court decides cases that include both the majority opinion and the dissenting opinion. I propose that all votes by Levy Court Commissioners, in favor or otherwise, be explained by listing the reasons the Commissioners feel the way they do. As residents of the districts they represent, we deserve to know why they are representing us, or in some cases, misrepresenting us.
